Don't be SAD! 季節性感情障害の対策

After some snow fall late in the season, it's finally starting to feel like winter here in Tokachi. For many foreign residents without families, it is very easy to feel down this time of year. In this month's issue of Obihiro Pioneer we will introduce seasonal affective disorder (often shortened to "SAD") and how you can keep it from affecting you this winter.

What is SAD?

According to the US National Institute for Mental Health, seasonal affective disorder, or SAD (季節性感情障害 kisetsusei kanjo shogai), is a type of depression that occurs with the change of seasons. SAD is often associated with winter. Common symptoms include:

- Feeling depressed most of the day
- Feeling hopeless or worthless
- Experiencing changes in appetite or weight
- Having low energy
- Social withdrawal

While most individuals would not be clinically diagnosed with SAD, it is not uncommon to feel some of these symptoms over the course of Hokkaido's long winter.

What causes SAD?

While the exact cause of SAD is unknown there are a few common occurrences amongst people with SAD:

- They have trouble regulating serotonin, a chemical which affects mood
- They may overproduce melatonin, which regulates sleep
- They may produce less vitamin D, the insufficiency of which is often associated with depression

What all three have in common is a chemical imbalance in the individual.

Making it to Summer

※The following are suggestions to help with symptoms related to depression. If you are seriously concerned with your mental well-being, please consult with a medical professional.

With the days being shorter in winter, most would probably want to curl up in bed and try to hibernate until spring. Since we aren't bears, here are some ways to help keep maintain your mood even in winter:

Exercise regularly!

Exercising releases endorphins, which are chemicals in your brain that make you feel more positive. It is said that the effects are similar to morphine, a painkiller.

Exercising with a friend or to some upbeat music will help you enjoy your exercise more.

While indoor exercise facilities are aplenty, you can make the most of the winter season by taking up winter sports to keep yourself moving. The Tokachi area is best known for its speed skating and has a number of rinks open to the public.

Interact with others

If you are feeling down, you can let out your thoughts and concerns to others. Even if you aren't feeling particularly sad, you can enjoy activities even more with friends. Even just being in the company of others will help to remind you that you are not alone this winter.

Make the effort to go out with friends, or better yet, bring them over! 鍋パーティー nabe paatii or hot pot parties are a great way to warm up with having a fun time with friends.

Go outside!

Tokachi is lucky to have some of the longest hours of sunlight in Hokkaido (even in winter!). Being out in the natural sunlight is known to increase production of vitamin D, which we previously mentioned the lack of which is associated with depression. Kill two birds with one stone by trying some outdoor activities such as snow shoeing or cross-country skiing.

Many public facilities offer lessons for beginners. Please check online or with your local municipality office for more information.

As Hokkaido's winter takes up nearly half of the year, it is very easy to feel down and/or alone this time of year.

Please make sure to take care of your health and consult a professional if needed. Don't let SAD get the best of you this winter!
