Hokkaido Town Name Origins 北海道市町村名の語源

Hokkaido is Japan's largest prefecture and contains the largest amount of cities, towns and villages of any prefecture in Japan. While towns in Honshu have longstanding Japanese historical influence, Hokkaido's towns most often derive from the language of the native Ainu people and the name that the Ainu had for those regions or local land forms, such as rivers and lakes. The Ainu language is very different from Japanese, resulting in some interesting town names that even Japanese people can't guess without knowing how to read it first! I'll introduce some modern town names in Tokachi/Hokkaido to give you an idea of their supposed origins.

Obihiro

The origin of this word is actually very complicated, confusing, and highly debated. The origin comes from the Ainu name for the Obihiro River which was [operperkep]. The consensus on the meaning is {river that is severely torn up at the river mouth}. In actuality, the area was called many similar names, including [oberiberip], [obiobirop], and [oberoberop]. Japanese people heard this and recorded it as Oberiberi or Oberobero. In 1871, the government added kanji to the Oberobero name and it became the current kanji for Obihiro (帯広). However, these kanji were read as [obirubirup] and [oberiberi]. When the Banseisha, the pioneers of Obihiro, first arrived in 1883, they called the area Oberiberi, but soon after, the normal reading for the kanji was used and the area was called Obihiro ever since!

Shimizu

You might think it derives from a person named Shimizu, however, it actually comes from the Ainu word [pekerpet], meaning {bright and clear river}. In 1899, Pekerebetsu Post Station was established in the town of Hitomai. Town eventually consolidated under the name Shimizu, which means {clear water} in Japanese.

Otofuke

The name comes from the Otofuke River in Ainu, called [otopke]. The meaning of this is {place where hair grows}. Some propose that the Otofuke River flows like hair. Others propose that the willow trees that grow from the riverbed of the river look like black hair, giving it its name.

Ashoro

The town gets its name from the Ashoro River, which comes from the Ainu word [eshoro pet], which means {river that flows downward}. The current town of Ashoro was actually split in two between Nishi Ashoro in Tokachi and Ashoro in Kushiro areas. In 1948, Ashoro became part of Tokachi and in 1955, the two combined into one Ashoro.

Sapporo

The city name likely comes from the Ainu word [sat poro pet], or {big dry river}. This is because a long time ago, the Toyohira River dried up and had almost no water during the dry season. In the oldest records found, the area was written with the hiragana for Satsuhoro (さつほろ). It remained the most common reading throughout the years, but was sometimes transcribed as Satsuporo and Shiyatsuhoro. During the end of the Meiji period, it was given its current kanji (札幌) and pronounced as Sapporo ever since.

Tomakomai

The city name comes from the Ainu word [to makomay], which means {the Makomai River that flows from the swamp}. The river's name comes from the words [makoma nay], meaning {stream that flows from the deep part of the mountain}. You might be wondering why the Japanese character 牧 is read as mai in the city name (苫小牧) when it does not actually have that reading. It is theorized that during the Meiji period when Japan was deciding the kanji for city names, the person in charge of submitting the name planned on using the kanji 枚, which is pronounced mai. His name was Komaki (小牧), and since he was so used to writing his own name, he accidentally submitted his name's kanji, resulting in the wrong kanji but still pronounced Tomakomai!

Furano

Comes from the Ainu word [hura nu i], meaning {place that has a smell}. The Furano River, which flows from Mount Tokachi, contains large amounts of sulfur, so it gave off a sulfuric smell. In the past, Furano was a small town that covered a wide area. In 1956 and 1966, it combined with two towns called Higashiyama and Yamabe. Furano was split into four towns covering different parts of the Furano River. Now, we have Kamifurano, Nakafurano, Furano, and Minamifurano!

Wakkanai

The name comes from a river that flowed through the area called {yam wakka nay}, or {river with cold, beautiful water}. There was another river in the area that contained lots of salmon called {husko yam wakka nay}, and it became the name of the town, which later became the name of the area.

Japanese children love to make any sort of decision easier with a simple game of rock-paper-scissors, or jan ken pon! However, aside from this hand game, there are other games that Japanese kids and even adults play to kill time or make decisions. One of these games is yubisuma. It is a game in which the goal is to guess the number of thumbs put up by everyone and be the first to get out of the game! Here are the basic rules.

1. Players make fists and put their hands forward.
2. The first player says issēnōse(いっせーのーせ) and a number of thumbs that they think will be standing up (zero, ichi, ni, san, yon, etc).
3. The exact moment that the player says the number, all players (including the speaker) put up as many thumbs as they want. It can be 0, 1 or 2 thumbs.
4. The players count the number of thumbs that are up. If the number of thumbs matches the number, then the person who said the number removes one of their hands from the game.
5. The next player goes and repeats the process. The first player to remove both hands from the game is the winner!

For a bit of trivia, do you know the idol group SMAP? The name of this game comes from one of their TV shows where the members often played this game with guests.

Yubisuma is a combination of the word finger (yubi) and the first part of the pronunciation of SMAP in Japanese (sumappu)! Have fun playing!
