Holidays in March

3月の祝日

How is your winter faring, pioneers? The Hokkaido winter is notoriously long with a relatively short spring, however, that doesn't mean we can't look forward to the changing weather this month! While March is not particularly known in Japan for its abundance of holidays, it does have a number of celebrations that are traditional in nature.

Hina Matsuri

Thursday, March 3 is Hina Matsuri (ひな祭り), also known as Doll Festival. This festival has its origins in a very old custom called hinaokuri (ひな送り), in which paper dolls made to represent people were floated down the river in order to carry away all the illness and misfortune that might have befallen that person. This custom is still practiced in some parts of the country today. The custom of setting up elaborate doll displays began in the Edo Period (1603-1868), and only became popularized throughout the country after the Meiji era (1868-1912) when the dolls were commercialized and sold in stores.

Today, this day is celebrated especially by families with younger daughters. Families set up a display of dolls wearing the costumes of the Heian imperial court. The most common display consists of 15 dolls placed on a 7-tier platform which is covered with red felt. The set includes the emperor and the empress, three ladies-in-waiting, five male court musicians who represent an ensemble for a Noh play, the Ministers of Right and Left, and three servants who carry the emperor's shoes, wrapped hat, and a wrapped parasol. The display is made complete with various items of miniature furniture, a golden folding screen behind the royal couple, a peach tree and a cherry tree flanking the servants, the food offerings placed between the two ministers.

The food offering is usually a pair of hishimochi (菱餅), diamond-shaped rice cakes usually in three or five layers colored pink, yellow, green, white, and/or orange. Speaking of food, there are a number of food items that are eaten during this day, including multi-colored crackers called hinaarare (ひなあられ).

One of my favorite dishes is chirashizushi (ちらし寿司), which is essentially a bowl of sushi, containing shrimp, salmon, roe, mushrooms, and eggs. The shrimp is said to represent longevity. It's simple to make, so it is eaten throughout the year as well.

On the day of Hina Matsuri, friends and relatives are invited over to celebrate by drinking shirozake (白酒), or sweet white sake, and wishing for the health and happiness of the girls. The doll display is usually set up around mid-February and put away as soon as Hina Matsuri is over. This is done because of an old superstition that families that are slow in putting the dolls away have trouble marrying off their daughters.

White Day

In Japan, Valentine's Day is celebrated by women giving men various types of chocolates, whether they be for friendship or for expressing their feelings. If a man receives chocolate from a woman directly, he can return her feelings by giving her chocolate on White Day! White Day is exactly one month after Valentine's Day (March 14). While clearly a commercial holiday, advertising campaigns are strong, so you will see a number of cakes, chocolates and sweets being sold specifically for this day. If you received a chocolate from a special person on Valentine's Day, now's your chance to return the favor with delicious sweets!

Shunbun no Hi (春分の日)- Spring Equinox

This day, which falls upon March 21 this year, is astrologically one of the two days in which, due to the earth's tilt and position relative to the sun, the length of daytime is exactly equal to the length of nighttime and winter officially becomes spring. You may then be wondering why the spring equinox is an official Japanese holiday, while the summer and winter solstices aren't. The reasoning for this is that historically, the Japanese imperial court held a ritual celebrating their ancestors on the days of both spring and autumn equinoxes. Due to this, the government made it an official holiday, and calls this day a day to "give thanks to nature and love all living things."

There is also a religious reason why this day is special. In Japanese Buddhism, there is a 7-day-long celebration called Higan (彼岸) which covers the 3 days before and after the spring equinox. Religiously, due to the equivalence of the day and night, Buddha appears to help guide souls across the river between the earthly realm and Nirvana. Thus, religious families visit their family tomb and offer food, such as botamochi (ぼたもち) to help guide their ancestors across the river.

Living in Tokachi Bus Tour

十勝生活バスツアー

Do you live in Tokachi? (of course you do) Do you like busses? (of course you do!) Do you want to learn more about life in Tokachi and how to be able to get around without a car? (most definitely!) Well, then listen up!

On Monday, March 21 (holiday), the Tokachi International Association will be holding a bus tour meant to help foreign residents learn about life in Tokachi. This time, the bus tour will take you to different facilities in Tokachi, including the bus terminal at Obihiro Station where you can learn how to get tickets to Sapporo, Tokachi Bus where you will learn how to ride a local bus, the Obihiro Centennial Museum where you can learn about the history of Obihiro, and more! These tours are planned to continue this year and will showcase facilities throughout different towns and cities in Tokachi.
